EGYPT-ISRAEL: UN observers confirm that Egypt has more forces in the limited armaments zone than are allowed by the Sinai II disengagement agreement. They report that Egypt has 16 infantry battalions within the limited armaments zone;
the agreement limits
each side to eight.

The 16 battalions were located in an area extending from Port Said on the Mediterranean to an area southeast of Port Tawfiq at the mouth of the Gulf of Suez. With the exception of one infantry battalion and a few combat support units at Port Said, the deployed battalions and combat support units probably are lead elements of the five infantry divisions located on the west bank of the canal.

LEBANON: Leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt, who originally insisted that a new president be chosen before May 2, has now protested holding the elections so soon after President Franjiyah's approval of the election law.

Jumblatt apparently wants more time to map out his strategy and has intimated that he may not participate in the election unless it is postponed. Although his threats are being widely regarded as pre-election maneuvering, they have cast new uncertainty around the election.

Jumblatt's protest may have been partially responsible for an escalation in the fighting yesterday. A leftist group reportedly attacked Christian-held territory in Beirut's port area. Clashes also erupted in the mixed Christian-Muslim villages east of the capital.

PORTUGAL: The Popular Democratic Party has modified its position on pulling out of the provisional government.

In a statement issued Tuesday evening, the party said it had placed its government posts "at the disposal" of Prime Minister Azevedo, implying that he could shuffle the cabinet at his discretion.

Popular Democratic ministers did not attend a cabinet meeting yesterday. A party spokesman said they would stay away until Azevedo decides whether they should remain in office.

The party was probably influenced in changing its position by the Army General Staff. The General Staff reportedly told the Popular Democratic secretary general that it wanted to avoid a crisis over the provisional government that could give President Costa Gomes a pretext for remaining in office.

NOTES

The Soviet Union's statement yesterday reiterating its interest in reconvening the Geneva peace conference seems timed chiefly to coincide and compete with discussions on the renewal next month of the mandate for the UN force on the Golan Heights.

The statement offers a new course of procedure and is intended to ^{25X1} appeal to both the Palestinians and Israel.

Egypt and the USSR
signed their 1976 trade protocol yesterday.

The new agreement calls for trade valued at $642 million in 1976-- a third less than in 1975--and allows for an Egyptian trade surplus of $142 million to be used to reduce Egypt's debt to the USSR.

Beyond the expulsion of five Soviets last week from the Hulwan steel mill for an alleged "slow down," Cairo has taken no overt steps to reduce the level or character of its economic relationship with the Soviet Union. Most of the 1,800 Soviet technicians assigned to economic projects in Egypt will probably remain until their contracts expire or their projects are completed.

OPEC attitudes on oil price levels appear to have moderated since last September's meeting when most producers were in favor of some increases.

Abu Dhabi's petroleum minister has said that no firm recommendations were reached on a price hike at the unpublicized conclave of OPEC oil ministers in Geneva last week, but that the United Arab Emirates, Saudi Arabia, Venezuela, and Kuwait now favor continuing the price freeze until the end of the year. Earlier reporting indicated that Algeria also would support a freeze. The petroleum minister stated that Iran and perhaps some others favor a small increase.

Greece and Turkey have agreed to hold another round of talks on the Aegean continental shelf.

[REDACTED] the meeting will probably take place this June in Bern if there is agreement on the terms of reference. Neither side seems ready to compromise, although the results of the Law of the Sea Conference now in progress could provide some new grounds for discussion.

25X1

Athens' agreement to another meeting, as well as the approaching US Congressional debate on the Greek and Turkish military assistance packages, might incline Ankara to postpone exploration in contested waters.

Spanish Prime Minister
Arias' speech last evening provided the most detailed presentation of the government's reform program
yet presented, but it will satisfy neither left nor right.

Arias outlined specific reform measures planned by the government and offered a timetable for implementation. His call for a referendum on constitutional reforms by next October and general elections early in 1977 sets a more leisurely pace for the program than reformers such as Foreign Minister Areilza had been urging. Except for the electoral law, all reform measures are to be ready for submission to parliament by May 15.

The Prime Minister reaffirmed the government's refusal to legalize the Communist Party.

Panama is attempting to extradite the captain of a US-registered fishing boat presently in Canal Zone waters.

The boat allegedly was fishing 25X1 within Panama's 200-mile limit.
A Panamanian ship has taken up position near the Atlantic entrance to the canal, possibly to intercept the fishing boat if it is not detained by Canal Zone authorities.
